REFERENCE MATERIAL

The reference section of the Anesthesiology web site is home to over 3,000 documents. The notes below tell you how to find the document you are looking for.

NAVIGATION

The first two levels of the table of contents are given on the left side of the display. For example, to find the Keywords that begin with A, first click on Keywords on the left to open up that section, then click on A. If the contents are more than three levels deep, as is the case with Emergency Reference > ACLS Protocols > Adult ACLS Material Contents, you navigate through additional levels of the contents in the middle section of the screen.

SEARCHING

If the location of the document is not obvious to you, you can type something in the search box and click on GO (or press Enter). By default, the site searches through the titles of the documents for the word(s) you are looking for, but if you click on “Full Text”, it will search for those words anywhere in the body of the documents.

In both cases, if you enclose your search phrase in quotes, it will find only those documents where the words appear together. For example, if you type “heart transplant” in quotes, it will look for that exact phrase in a document or title. If you leave off the quotes, those two words may be separated, as in “Cardiac Replacement with a Total Artificial Heart as a Bridge to Transplantation.”

Finally, the title search allows partial words, but full text searches don’t. If you type “Glycopy,” a title search will bring up the medication profile on Glycopyrrolate, but a full text search won’t find it.
